

Roger Wood

Born in Lincolnshire, I spent the greater part of my working life in primary education, having trained at Bishop Lonsdale College of Education, Derby and Nottingham University. I have worked in various counties during my career as a class teacher, deputy head and headmaster. Since retirement I have worked at Sandringham House and studied for a MA and PhD in military history at Birmingham and Wolverhampton Universities respectively. I now write in the field of First World War history. I am Chair of Governors at the Sandringham Estate Federation of Church Academy Primary Schools and in my spare time enjoy exploring medieval churches and walking in the Yorkshire Dales.
